QANTAS

19 February 2018

Dear Mr Abdul,

Thank you for letting me know about your new airline. I had heard some rumours of another entrant in the market, so I appreciate you taking the time to write.

First, I should say that I'm not typically in the business of giving advice to my competitors. Your newly-appointed Head of Legal might have something to say about that, too.

But I'm going to make an exception on this occasion, because I too was once a young boy who was so curious about flight and all its possibilities.

My number one tip for starting an airline is to put safety front and centre. And do everything you can to make travel as comfortable and affordable as possible for your passengers. That's been the Qantas way for almost 100 years, and it's worked for us.

Now, to your troubles thinking about sleep on 21-hour flights. This is something we are grappling with too, as we embark on Project Sunrise (which is our plan to fly passengers non-stop between the east coast of Australia and London).

To help with sleep, we're looking at different cabin designs that give people spaces to stretch out and exercise.

We want to think up as many ideas as possible to make the journey more comfortable for all.

For this reason, I would like to invite you to a Project Sunrise meeting between myself, as the CEO of Australia's oldest airline, and you, as the Operation Office.

At this meeting we can compare notes on what it's like to run an airline. And I'd like to offer you a tour of our Operations Centre (where we keep an eye on every Qantas flight, wherever they are in the world).

Thank you, again, for your letter. I'll be in touch shortly about finding a time for our meeting.

Yours sincerely
